Canoe Camping Routes

Grand Teton National Park offers a range of canoe camping routes to choose from, each with its own unique challenges and rewards. Here's an overview of the most popular options:

- Jenny Lake Loop: This classic route takes you around the scenic Jenny Lake, offering stunning views of the towering Teton peaks. The 12-mile loop can be completed in one day or extended over multiple days for a more leisurely experience.

- Jackson Lake Loop: This longer route stretches across the vast Jackson Lake, providing ample opportunities for wildlife viewing and secluded campsites. The 35-mile loop can be completed in three to five days, allowing you to explore the park at a relaxed pace.

- Leigh Lake Loop: This shorter route winds through the picturesque Leigh Lake and its surrounding wetlands. The 9-mile loop is ideal for beginners and families, offering a quiet and serene paddling experience.

- String Lake Loop: This easy route takes you around the small but beautiful String Lake, located just a short distance from Jenny Lake.

The 4-mile loop is perfect for a quick paddle or a relaxing picnic spot.

Camping Permits and Regulations

To ensure the preservation of the park's natural resources, camping permits are required for all overnight stays in Grand Teton National Park. Permits can be obtained online or at the park's visitor centers. It's important to reserve your permit in advance, especially during peak season.

When camping, be sure to follow all park regulations, including:

- Camping only in designated campsites
- No open fires (camp stoves only)
- Properly disposing of waste
- Respecting wildlife and their habitats
